

Refugees are people that leave their countries in order to seek asylum. In the article, "Political Asylum" by Bloomberg, there is a debate about whether or not people should be allowed to get asylum. Similarly, in the text, "From War to America" by Kristin Lewis, the Jacobs family left Syria because of the war and found safety in America. Refugees face problems trying to leave their home countries as well as problems once they arrive in the United States.

In the text, "Political Asylum" by Bloomberg, refugees deal with challenges when leaving their home country. The author states, "U.S. President Donald Trump issued a ban on people leaving war-torn Syria. He said they could not come into the United States." This shows that people may be in danger in their own country, however, they are not able to leave their country in order to find safety. In paragraph 4 of "The Situation" it says, "A refugee in one country may be wanted by the police in another country." This demonstrates that refugees may not always be innocent people looking for safety. Instead, they may be criminals or people that are causing problems in their country. Overall, refugees deal with problems when fleeing their countries to seek asylum.

In the text, "From War to America" refugees face problems when they arrive in the United States. The text says on page 8, "Refugees coming to America may not be fluent in English or know about cultural traditions like Thanksgiving and prom, making them feel like outsiders." This proves that they face problems because they are coming from a different country and they may not have studied these things in school and they may not celebrate these holidays or events. Another example on page 8 says, "Then there are practical issues: finding jobs, getting driver's licenses and bank accounts, and learning how to get around in a new place. Even grocery stores can be daunting.” This shows that they face problems because they did not have these things in their old country and they are not used to doing these things. The author illustrates that refugees face problems when they arrive in the United States.

In conclusion, refugees face problems trying to leave their home countries as well as problems once they arrive in the United States. First of all, some refugees are not able to leave their countries to get to safety and others are criminals that are trying to escape their countries. On the other hand, when refugees get to America they have a hard time adjusting to the new culture and often times struggle with language. Refugees will continue to face challenges when leaving their countries or entering new countries.
